

People Need People

OUR MISSION

AADAP (Asian American Drug Abuse Program) empowers individuals and families to achieve recovery, opportunity and justice by addressing substance use and strengthening community conditions that promote well-being.

OUR IMPACT AREAS

Integrated Behavioral Health

Culturally affirming treatment and recovery services for people facing substance use disorder challenges. Through residential and outpatient services, people receive personalized care that includes counseling, case management and ongoing support for a healthy life.

Youth Development

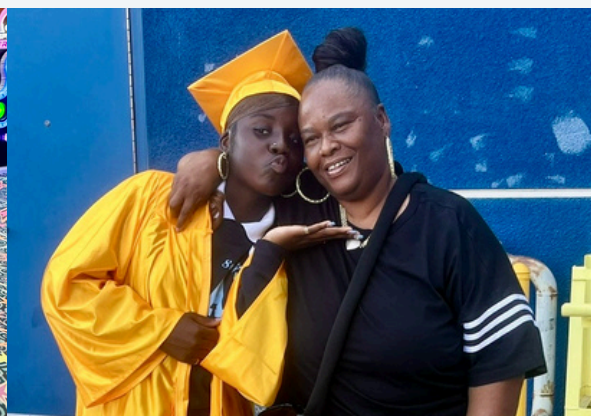

Family-centered school engagement efforts that foster resilience and healthy development. Through supportive relationships, families are connected to mental health care, basic needs and wellness resources while creating opportunities for youth leadership and positive community engagement.

Community Engagement & Wellness

Prevention and risk reduction services to strengthen the health and well-being of communities. Through comprehensive substance use services, HIV/STI resources, housing supports and community education, people build resilience and mobilize community networks for long-term wellness.

Economic & Workforce Advancement

Economic empowerment programs that advance employment for long-term economic stability. Through career counseling, job readiness training, financial coaching and small business development, individuals, families, and businesses gain the skills and confidence to achieve lasting mobility and success.

Diversity • Inclusion • Social Justice • Community-centered

OUR HISTORY

AADAP (Asian American Drug Abuse Program) was founded in 1972 to address a growing substance use crisis in Los Angeles' Asian American community. Its roots trace back to young activists and community leaders to combat overdose deaths among Asian American youth. With their advocacy and support from the federal government, AADAP became the first publicly funded drug treatment and prevention program serving the Asian and Pacific Islander community.

Over the past five decades, AADAP has evolved into an inclusive, community-based organization that empowers all individuals, families and communities. What began as a small, volunteer-driven effort has grown into a trusted network of culturally competent, multilingual and holistic services that reach across South Los Angeles and beyond.

Today, AADAP continues to meet people where they are, impacting thousands of lives annually. Guided by its ohana (family) spirit and enduring philosophy, People Need People, AADAP embraces whole-person wellness, helping individuals and families heal and build healthier, more interconnected lives.
